20 One-Liners to Remember

Quick-fire facts for last-minute revision.

- 1 RBI's framework for the compliance function and CCO role was issued via circular dated 11 September 2020.
This circular remains the master RBI reference for how Indian banks must structure and govern their compliance function.
- 2 The Chief Compliance Officer (CCO) is mandatory for all scheduled commercial banks under RBI's 2020 framework.
The 2020 framework requires every scheduled commercial bank to appoint a CCO who heads the compliance function.
- 3 The compliance function is the second line of defence in the three-lines-of-defence model.
The model treats compliance and risk management as the second line, alongside the first-line business unit and third-line audit.
- 4 The first line of defence is the business unit that owns and manages its own risks.
Under the three-lines model, the business unit itself owns and manages the risks it creates day to day.
- 5 The third line of defence is internal audit, which independently assures the board.
Internal audit checks that both the business and compliance lines are functioning effectively.

6 The CCO must have a minimum fixed tenure of three years under RBI's framework.

RBI mandates this minimum tenure so the CCO has enough independence and continuity to do the job effectively.

7 Premature transfer of a CCO needs board approval and prior intimation to RBI.

This safeguard prevents banks from removing a CCO early to sidestep uncomfortable compliance findings.

8 The CCO should ideally be a rank below Executive Director, not below two levels from the CEO.

This seniority requirement gives the CCO enough stature to challenge business decisions credibly.

9 The CCO reports functionally to the board's Audit Committee, with administrative oversight from the MD & CEO.

This reporting line keeps the CCO's escalation path independent of business-line management.

10 The compliance function must be independent and cannot carry business targets.

Independence from business targets prevents conflicts of interest that could weaken compliance oversight.

11 The governing law for AML/KYC compliance in India is the Prevention of Money-Laundering Act, 2002 (PMLA).

PMLA, with its Maintenance of Records Rules and RBI's KYC Master Direction, anchors India's AML regime.

12 Banks must maintain KYC and transaction records for five years under PMLA rules.

The five-year retention rule keeps records available for investigation or regulatory review.

13 A Suspicious Transaction Report (STR) must be filed within seven working days of establishing suspicion.

This seven-working-day timeline is a key detail tested under PMLA reporting obligations.

14 A Cash Transaction Report (CTR) covers cash transactions above rupees ten lakh.

This threshold, including integrally connected transactions in a month, triggers mandatory CTR filing.

15 Banks file CTR, STR, CCR and NTR reports with the Financial Intelligence Unit-India (FIU-IND).

FIU-IND is the central agency that receives and analyses these AML-related reports from banks.

16 Banks appoint a Principal Officer responsible for AML reporting under PMLA.

The Principal Officer, along with a Designated Director, owns the bank's AML reporting obligations.

17 FATCA is a US law requiring foreign financial institutions to identify and report US-person accounts.

FATCA compliance means banks identify US-person account holders and report them for exchange with the US IRS.

- 18 India implemented FATCA through an Inter-Governmental Agreement (IGA Model 1) signed with the US in 2015.

This IGA lets Indian banks report US-person account data to CBDT instead of directly to the US IRS.

- 19 CRS is the OECD's multilateral standard for automatic exchange of financial account information.

CRS lets India automatically exchange account information with over 100 signatory jurisdictions.

- 20 Banks report FATCA/CRS reportable accounts annually using Form 61B.

Form 61B is the annual return banks file with the Income-tax Department for reportable accounts.
